

The original intent of the proposed ruling is commendable and I support the FCC's need to "put teeth" by enforcing already existing policies relating to indecent programming. I am, however absolutely opposed to the proposed ruling requiring every station to record and retain copies of all programming 24/7. I am more in favor of spot-checking questionable formats and stations/networks which have been reported to the FCC as being flagrantly in violation.

To require all FCC regulated stations to comply is a major and unnecessary hardship, especially for small stations.

Another point is that for this to work it would needlessly require increased "layers" of bureaucracy to even remotely come close to thoroughly monitor contents of all stations. It gives me the sense also of being considered guilty until proven innocent. It's backwards!

Where to STORE?! We find it difficult enough even to archive program and production pieces that we wish to retain. Requirement to store all programs would result in prohibitive expense and manpower.

Thank you in advance for rejecting consideration of this proposal!
